A TRIP TO PUT-IN-BAY.

(Correspondence of the Intelligencer.) Pur-in-Bay, June 25, 1873. A trip to Put-in-Bay, at this heated season, is a pleasure not without its alloy The alloy is found in the ride by rail. I came hither via the Baltimore & Obio road came numer via the Baltimore & Unio road from Wheeling to Sandusky. A journey of two or three hundred miles by rail is no joke under the most favorable circumstances; but with the temperature up among the nincties, a fretul baby in the next seat forward, another in the seat just ext seat for ward, another in the sever coss, and a never ceasing shower of oal cinders that reminds one unpleasantly of the fate of Pompeii and Herculaneum, it is a severe trial to the fortitude. It is something of an alleviation to have the only vacant half seat in the car when a blooming young lady gets on at a way station, to have this accepted by her with thanks and a very sweet smile, and then to find her intelligent and willing to talk. But this is only temporary, for she get of after a little while and you are left to allowing sharply, but despite this we like and intervals are not suitable, being too and blowing sharply, but despite this we little while and in its place. It has too dut on the upper deck and made up if not, visitors can provide themselves. Ways under some circumstances that I cannot commend, and these are places even the scenery of the Lake, giorified the not which there are vineyards, a substitution state of the scenery of the lake, giorified the not which there are vineyards, a where it is not welcome. The person sho invented bituminuous coal deserves well of his country; but the benefactor would have been enhanced if he had also invented a way to burn it in locomotives without distributing the residuum among the passengers. But since this was neglected by the original inventor, the trav-eling public would be infinitely obliged to anybody who will get up a supplementany act requiring the locomotives of all passenger trains to keep their cinders to themselves. There is more peril in this cinder infliction than the general public may be aware of. It is not only that after a long journey, literally in secle-fold, and askee we are like to find in sack-cloth and sahes, we are like to find surselves at the end of it buried like anclient Formers at the end of it of the client Formers, but we run the risk of be-lient Formers, but we run the risk of be-they disappear below the horizon as we A friend and I rowed over there this of fire, like wicked Sodom and Gomorrab. leave them, or are lifted out of the water morning and captured the great bankers as we approach them, they afford a pleas-An illustration of this danger occurred as we approach them, they aftor a pleas stronghold without the firing of a gun, yesterday in the car in which I was riding. The Bay is historical as the British in the war of 1812, and several of Perry's men killed in that engagement lie near the beach in front of the Put-in-Bay Hotel, the place being marked by a large tree fenced in with posts and chain. The place has had some prominence given it as a summer resort by Jay Cooke's purchase of a small neighboring island on which he built a summer residence. For the past three of four summers it has had a good many visitors and the number promises to increase rapidly. Twice as many are expected the seen increased accordingly. The boat is a pretty little aflair but on account of its size it is rather lively in its motions when the take is rough. There had been a storm a couple of hours before we reached Sandusky, a still breeze was blowing and the water was far from smooth. There was but one case of sea-sickness, though several of the passengers evidently felt misgifings about the stomach. (To-day, however, a school picnic party coming over in another steamer were all made very sick and threw their breakfasts overboard) The trip across from Sandusky is so pleas and a one that the passengers regret that darkness comes on before its accomplished.
